

Moving in the School

A Story for

Sensory Stories

Schools have many rooms to help children learn different things. Children need to move through the hallways to get to other rooms in the school.

Sensory Stories

Hallways can be noisy and crowded.
Some children don't like being in crowded hallways.
They don't like the noise. They also don't like being bumped.

Sensory Stories

I can do special things to make it easier to go through the hallway when it's noisy and crowded.
I can put on my heavy fanny pack.
That helps me feel calm.

Sensory Stories

Then I might put on my special headphones.
That makes it less noisy.

Sensory Stories

If the hallway is crowded, I try to stay an arm's length away from the person in front of me.

Sensory Stories

When I am in the hallway, I try to stay close to the wall.
It's not as crowded on the side.

Sensory Stories

I move through the hallway and try to avoid bumping other people. If I am accidentally bumped, I can back away and give myself a big hug.

Sensory Stories

When I get to where I need to go, I can stretch
my arms up high and take a deep breath.
I like to go to other rooms where I can learn different things.
